During a trip to the Bighorn 2 years ago I learned about a strong tippet material called Enrico Puglisi's PowerFull Premium Tippet Material. The trico hatch was in progress and light tippet was necessary. I was catching some strong and heavy fish and took notice to the strength of the tippet. I could really lean into the fish and bring them to the net quickly without fear of breaking off. It was then that I asked the guide about the tippet, which he had attached to my leader. He pulled a spool of the PowerFull tippet material from his pocket and it showed it to me. The breaking strength per diameter of the material exceeded most other products significantly. When I arrived home, I immediately placed an order for several spools of tippet from Water Striders. Now, my supply of the tippet material is nearly gone, and I find the PowerFull tippet material is very difficult to find. Can anyone tell me if this tippet material is currently in production and available in the typical range of diameters?
