

Subject: : Conservation

Topic: : More work along the Loyalhanna

Re: More work along the Loyalhanna

Author: : chubmaster

Date: : 2013/8/15 0:10:00

URL:

yuengling; The "unusual" (crap) smell is the Ligonier Borough sewer treatment plant adjacent to the delayed harvest section, just west of the swinging bridge. When it is hot or if the streams rise, the smell is awful. To date, I have heard nothing that there is any sewer drainage into the Loyalhanna from the plant other than treated water.

foxfire; I totally understand your complaints concerning the ravaging of land for the updated sewer lines. As you said, this is a good thing for water quality in the long run. The costs are crazy, my in-laws went through the same thing. I used to live behind Idlewild Park and you could see/smell seepage of poorly maintained septic tanks. As a fisherman/resident without stream-side real estate, I am happy with the sewer improvements but understand your frustration. However, it was long overdue. Real estate isn't discriminate of weekenders or residents.