I don't have the scientific answer for you. I don't profess to know more than a dozen Latin names nor do I really want to. I'll call them sulphurs, cahills, olives or other generic names.

I live a few miles down in Dauphin. From mid-May until early September, there is some type of sulphur / Cahill / steno type of hatch almost every night. when I take the dog out at around 11, there are anywhere from one to ten species on my car. They range from #12 down to #22. Wing shades and eye color / size vary from week to week. I've taken dozens of pics with intentions of looking them up but always lose interest before completing the task.

Pcray or one of the othe bug guys will have an answer for ya
