The short version is that young of the year (YOY) bass numbers were below average in the Susquehanna River as well as the West and North branches.

Well.....as we had speculated here on this forum earlier this summer, the high waters did indeed impact YOY SMB numbers across the Susquehanna watershed. At least this appears the likely reason for the poor numbers this year. My guess would be that the Delaware watershed and other mid sized river systems in the eastern half of the state will probably show similar results.
