I know where you mean...right upstream of the "No Fishing on Sundays" sign, right? 😊

Havice is stocked in that stretch so I assume the log deflectors there are just to slow down the flow and make some slack holding water for the stockies. Otherwise naturally that area would appear to be a pretty straight, shallow riffle. It's right by the road and a convenient place to dump stockies and easy access for anglers thanks to the access provided by the land owner (as you mentioned, what appears to be an Amish farm). I've never fished it there...more appealing water (and less cows) further upstream in the SF.
