I have had zero issues with my Bucks Bags since '05. Beeber had a bladder leak once but that was b/c how it was strapped to the trailer and the zipper unzipped and caught the bladder. Bucks have the only stainless frames, which are heavier but can be repaired if it breaks...Kray can tell you what happens to a toon flying off the trailer at 70 mph, and that Scadden is RIP since welding aluminum is very difficult if not impossible depending on the break.

I finally installed the standing platform on my Bucks this year which makes my Bronco like their Henry Fork model...it was more sturdy than the Scadden platform but its permanent (which would be an issue if you might hit a rock, it also rides close to or in the water sometimes), it makes it heavy, and requires allen keys/extra times to disassemble. If I could start over I would prolly get a Scadden for the superior platform alone...but while we're at it, I'll stir the pot and say D. Scadden learned everything he knows while working for Buck Bags except how to provide good customer service
