Here's my theory on steelhead flies.

Early season: streamers. They're used to eating lots of baitfish in the streams.

Mid season: eggs. They're spawning

Late season: nymphs. They're getting accustomed to the forage base of the streams.

Now this is a guideline, not a rule. I catch fish on all 3 types of patterns all year round, but I will typically start with these things depending on what part of the season it is.
