Thanks HA. I'm not too concerned whether I actually purchase the waders there...I'm fine with ordering them online. I just want to check them out in person up close...just a demo pair is fine.

I'll need a new pair before temps drop this Fall. My current pair is kind of at the total loss stage. They were $100ish Cabelas house line jobs and I got approximately 1 3/4 years out of them. The first year was leak free and the last 9 months or so have been dealing with minor repairs that have now gotten out of control. My general formula is every $100 spent should buy you a year of leak free performance, the way I fish anyway. Half of me just wants to go the cheap route again, but I really like the sound of the construction of the Bean Kennebec's from what I've read...Want to get a look at them up close and see if I think the extra $100 is worth it and will get me to the 2 year barrier or beyond leak free.
