Matt - Last day I worked for the Bean was in May, and I haven't been in the store since (Center Valley).

If you get up there, ask for Steve or George - they know their stuff. They have the Kennebec's on display, and likely have them in stock. Call first though. They're nice waders, and pretty beefy in construction - maybe a little too beefy for my tastes. I haven't used them, however, so I can't really give a recommendation on them. They're pretty heavy duty in construction, and I wouldn't hesitate to bust brush with them. Good choice if you only have one pair of waders, and need something reliable. May not be the best choice for hot weather - there's a lot of material in those things.

A couple of us that fished with you during our video making trip have picked up the new Orvis Silver Sonic convertibles. Really nice features, and a reasonable price for top quality waders. I haven't even taken mine out of the box yet, but Dan has used and abused his since Spring with no issues at all. Fox started using them, and really likes them as well. Might be worth checking into them...
