No, the pawls are strictly for sound.

Most times in an offset disc like that, you need to pull the gear on the spindle and flip it over and then replace it. The little C-clippy thing will slide off with a good pull.

The pawl and the offset gear/disc remain untouched.

They also have far more grease than needed. At most you want a thin coat, not globs of it.

What Gary said (above) about the conversion - flip over the main gear on the spindle is 100% correct. And definitely wipe off most of the grease.
