I am fairly new to fly fishing but I decide to take some streamers and poppers and head to my local creek that is a warmwater stream stocked with trout but most are dead by June and now there is none. I was targeting smallmouth and largemouth and headed out. I started with a black wooly bugger with a gold bead and that seemed to be the ticket for largemouth. Rather than let it float in the current and strip it I would keep my rod 1.5 feet above the water and strip then let it sink. This created a jigging action of my fly hopping on the bottom that the largemouth couldn't resist. Then I went to a swifter section ith some nice runs that was more smallmouth water. I tied on a brightly colored streamer and caught some fish that way. I decided to try a popper and the action increased with a sunfish about every cast and some decent smallmouth. Then it got dark and I headed in.
