I'm with the users  For trout the bugger is my fly of first choice early in the season and last resort before trying to recall where I last saw a tavern as the season goes on. Fishing for smallies on the Delaware a black wooly bugger is the go-to fly.

By the way, I think JayL has it right when he points out that if you use a fly a bit and it catches fish then you develop confidence in it and will fish it more, which usually means you learn over time to fish it better. For instance, I love fishing the GRHE and have caught a lot of fish with it. On the other hand I don't fish a Pheasant Tail unless I actually see trout eating a little green bug with stubby swept back legs. My buddy will fish next to me and do great with a PT. I don't believe in it because it hasn't worked for me so I don't fish it and of course never gain any confidence in it. My apologies to frank Sawyer.
