I used to spend most of my money on hunting and fishing gear at Cabelas and would catch myself spending 4 hours there at time. I dragged the girlfriend their for her first time and spent 5 hours in there and ended up closing the place and being the last customers out the door that night. She almost killed me!

Now I definitely try to spend more of my money local but I agree with Krotts post that there is definitely nothing wrong with what Cabelas has become. Cabelas also supports the local economy and look what the area around the Hamburg store has become. One thing a lot of people forget is since Cabelas is public there are a lot of pension funds that own its stock so their stock increase does affect public workers retirement in a small way. I know that's a reach but its still the case.
