We head up every year around the same week. last year we were up there when the storm sandy was tearing things up. The streams were low which had a affect on the fishing and then they were blown out which didn't help but we did catch fish.

Most of us know that the streams flows and levels have a major affect on the fish coming in. If the flows are close to normal and levels are good there seems to be better fishing and people are happy if they are lower, which they have been for a while, people complain there are no fish.

It is fishing and I am not able to go up several times a year so when the trip time comes around I fish what I find when I get there. Low flows and levels or good ones. We have been going up in the spring the last few years and actually have had better fishing but again the flows have been better than what they were in the fall
