I would guess it may have to do with the name coming from the formal name of something else. The Delaware was most likely named after a city or the Indian tribe, same with Letort or Brandywine, or Tionesta, The are all formal names for a person , place or group.

The other refer to maybe just a creek or rivers name based on its description. We made add the "The" to some in a perhaps unconcious attempt to personify the water. There by giving it the respect it deserves.
