I'm obviously enjoying this thread, especially yours, geebee. Heifers are females that haven't produced a calf yet. But you did give some decent about how to handle steer

Another one that always amazes me is that so many people think that only bulls have horns. They are not antlers, they are horns. My bull doesn't, and my cow does (or at least did when she was a baby).

Steer will often mock charge, but they have no balls literally and figuratively. You still shouldn't trust them or turn your back. If they mock charge, stand your ground and stare them straight in the eyes and talk to them or even yell in a stern voice. It is not hard to chase them off, either.

However, bulls can be dangerous depending on the bull and what is going on around him. My bull is as mean as a spoiled rotten puppy dog. He doesn't know any tricks, but will beg for treats and loves to be scratched behind the ears. But I don't recommend others trying this other than through the fence.

Not a very good fishing companion.
