Geebee, with "the lost misters" statement, I believe you are confusing heifers (young female) and steers (castrated male).

sorry, for the confusion - a language thing. In Europe we call the castrated males for fattening Heifers rather than steers :

<http://uk.ask.com/question/what-is-a-baby-bull-called> although fat chicks are called Heifers as slang, but that is because they have fattened calves....

Dairy cows i've never had an issue with, except the occasion licked window or mirror.

Well geebee, Jeeves is full of shart.

Note I did the UK only thing.

Besides the heifer thing, any young bull sold at two weeks old is almost always from a dairy breed and sell for damn cheap and often end up as veal. I know a guy who gets a couple of them for free every year, but steers them and raises them to full size.

BTW, my cattle are a UK breed. 😊

And note no ring.
