Great pictures - very evocative. The fish appears to be fully colored and ready to spawn. Respectfully, it's possible you and TB may have done well as a result of (rather than in spite of) the recent rains. The stream looks as though it's falling and clearing after the rain, which are classic trout fishing conditions, and exactly when I prefer to fish, especially after the low-flows of summer.

We picked the stream based on the high flow but fairly clear water. It was dropping, but not all streams get muddy from rain, if a stream is forested headwaters to mouth, it seldom gets muddy.
