

---

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : September's wild trout

Re: September's wild trout

Author: : dc410

Date: : 2013/9/18 6:52:32

URL:

There has been some real good information shared on this thread about fishing a dry/dropper rig as well as the relationship between water temp and fish activity at this time of year where temps are really starting to drop overnight but they daytime highs are still fairly mild.

I stopped for about an hour late yesterday afternoon and fished a different beat on the same stream with the same set up as in my OP. Bright sunny skies and very clear skinnier water made it very challenging. I did pick up about a half a dozen Brookies all on top ..... Nothing on the dropper. I didn't even see a brown. Definitely a totally different situation than the other evening. In fact, if I would have had more time to fish, the dropper certainly would have been coming off. Thanks for the feedback.

Sasquatch ..... Yep, you are definitely thinking right. As a matter of fact, I think I might have spotted some Sasquatch tracks in the one exposed gravel bar yesterday afternoon.