Jack, I can agree with that. Whenever I am tying to "fill the box", it is like a chore. When I am at school, it's a little better since I have more time and people to tie with, but it's still a PITA when you need to tie a mass amount of smaller flies.

Recently though, I have really been getting into tying streamers in all sizes. Musky flies are my favorite because every single one that comes off the vise is unique in it's own way. There's really no limit as to what color combos/materials you can use. And the best part is every 3rd or 4th fly that comes off the vise is usually a gem. Usually I'll tie 5, keep 3, and sell/give away 2.
