
Subject: : Gear Talk

Topic: : Old rod: what line weight do I use on it?

Re: Old rod: what line weight do I use on it?

Author: : FiveWeight

Date: : 2013/9/20 10:24:33

URL:

Quote:

shakey wrote:

Quote:

bikerfish wrote:

Quote:

gfen wrote:

There are no 8'6" fiberglass rods in the 1960s. Period. There aren't gonna be any 5wt rods, either, in that length, either.

.

????

no 8'6"???

I have 6 or 7 in that length.

i think he meant to say 8'6" FOUR weights.

anyway HI is one of my favorite brands.most of the hype against them is based on a few lines in a geirich book.

which i like because that keeps the prices down!

to the op,beautiful rod,prob a six ,but in the superior glass that can mean it could work from 5-7.

go fish the heck out of it.a six in glass is not too heavy because it fights like a four

Well stated Shakey. I almost always take it with on a trip as a 3rd back up. HI stuff is always low in cost and although it stinks to break one. Hit yard sales and flea markets and pick up another one or two. I said in another post here on the thread that I have a Fenwick also. That one there is a sweet little piece of glass too. I think I got my HI for $7.00 or so.