It basically comes down to this: If you are 100% absolutely going to find out what's in a trout's stomach because you are scientifically interested or absolutely have-got-to-know, I think almost everyone would prefer that you'd pump their stomach instead of killing them each time you go fishing.

But if you are like almost all fishermen- you don't need that info. I don't want it because it costs the trout quite a bit to get it either way.

Don't use one. When you pull a few stockies for the pan 2 or 3 times a year- check it out then.
