No. The thought has never even crossed my mind.

I look at it this way. First off I find it extremely invasive. Secondly, each bit of food that fish eats takes energy for it to catch and consume. Then you hook that fish, taking more energy from it. Once landed you proceed to steal all the food its collected through the day. Now not only is the fish recovering from the stress of being caught, it is currently at a major negative on the energy exerted vs potential energy consumed.

Lastly, I noticed your avatar, please don't subject native, or wild, fish to stomach pumping.
