Interesting.

Most small, freestone trout creeks in my neck of the woods have transient summer/early fall populations of sunfish and bass. Some years they are extremely thick and other years less so, but they're always there. Almost all of them vacate the creeks after first frost to return the following summer.

My guess would be that the sunnies in this creek will be gone within the next month - I doubt that they're still going to be there at trout spawning time.....but yuh never know. If you guys hit this creek later this year, it would be interesting to hear if you're still seeing so many WW fishes.
