Most small, freestone trout creeks in my neck of the woods have transient summer/early fall populations of sunfish and bass. Some years they are extremely thick and other years less so, but they're always there.

Interesting. About a month ago I fished a different wild trout stream and came across a bunch of sunfish. Not a lot, just a couple in the slow pools. It's a good stream for both wild and stocked trout but I wasn't really expecting to see sunnies. Makes me wonder what other streams they're in.

They can get annoying in the summer in Clark's above the dam, that's for sure.
