If you intend to fish it, be prepared to make repairs to the windings. They tend to get damaged easily on those older rods if they are still original finish.

Look them over and consider putting a thinned coat of clear varnish over the windings if it needs it. Just a thought. Don't be mad at me if afterwards someone tells you that it devalues it. It likely does, as does fishing with it and I certainly would fish it.

If you do need to repair the windings, check back here. You might find someone who has the right color winding thread to match.
