I read recently about the controversy between MD DCNR and bait fishermen complaining they could no longer harvest brook trout in the upper savage.

Where he was fishing is the lower Savage. (You probably already know this.) The upper is above the reservoir.

It's now pretty much C&R for all that watershed. You're right, the bait fishermen don't like it. But the average size brookie now seems to be larger, and there are more of them. MD DNR has been extensively studying the watershed for some years, radio tagging fish and tracking them.
