I second the advice. I generally like to fly fish the ATW outside the TT area - seems like they see less flies to me. The area does get hammered, but not many of the bait guys seem to go more than 100 yds from a parking lot. Walking gets you to some nice spots with less pressure. The wild browns seem to always survive and I generally try to get them to rise for a dry fly, but the usual scuds, worms, midges, small pheasant tails that work in any limestone will work at the Monocacy. Maybe it's just me, but those Monocacy browns seem to be able to take a fly and spit it out faster than any where else. Getting takes can be a lot harder for me than hooking up many days.
