We lost an guy with quite a few floats under his belt. I was banking on him leading one of the groups so that will be a pretty big blow. The idea was to divide into groups of 2-4 and hit different sections of the rivers. I'm trying to avoid the giant cluster F of 8 boats in one group. We will have to see who shows, when they show, how many seats there are and how the flows are (aka wing it). The flows are getting pretty low and I'm praying for some rain but don't see much in the 7 day forecast.

Lordville gauge is 1150 cfs - would rather see that at 1500-1600 cfs

Hale Eddy gauge is 490 cfs - would rather see that at 800 cfs

Fishes Eddy gauge is 506 cfs and I'd love to see that one at 1300 cfs all sections have good temps. I don't think water temps will reach 65 in Callicoon which is waaaay down river. A good soaking rain on Monday or Tuesday would be perfect.

 disclaimer **

The dam on the WB can go from 490 cfs to 2000 cfs for absolutely no reason and with little or no warning. There's always a chance that it may be too low to float on Thursday but dangerously high on Friday. It's always a crapshoot.
