

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : big brown in a small freestone

Re: big brown in a small freestone

Author: : Brown71

Date: : 2013/9/24 22:13:57

URL:

This post is a great one. I am one to definitely target large trout that I have found, during other trips. It is amazing how many big trout really are out there, it seems for some reason most people don't believe it though for whatever reason.

The tips given so far all are decent, except the fact I wouldn't waste a night checking a fish without taking a rod. These fish move and you just never know when the last time you may see a particular fish.

I have also experienced some very aggressive fish as the poster above described. Fish I thought spooked came back and were caught a bit later.

These same concepts apply on the bigger waters too, generally the top end fish are just much larger. My Dad and I late evening/early night fish a popular larger stream and we have caught fish to the 10 pound mark. They are out there.

Good luck to you it sounds like your on the right track!!