There is a pretty large waterfall in the upper part of this stream. Any fish that washed down over it - especially in flood conditions - would have taken quite a beating. And I wonder if they could have survived it. I think that it's possible that those sunfish might have swam up from the larger stream below. Those lower waterfalls aren't very big

I also think that the browns in this stream likely migrated up over those falls from that larger stream - which is stocked. I kinda doubt that they were put directly into it - given it's remote setting
