

Subject: : Tips and Tricks

Topic: : Tying my own steelhead leader.

Re: Tying my own steelhead leader.

Author: : mutzinbaugh

Date: : 2013/9/26 23:59:40

URL:

I watched jeff blood catch steelhead after steelhead while everyone else was just fishing. he absolutely is a master of flyfishing for steelhead...after observing his leader/rig the biggest thing I noticed was the length, he was using a very long leader with a float. how ever you can put your fly on a dead drift in their face you can hook up.

It really depends on the water you are fishing in. try this, take your spinning rod out with a bobber and start experimenting with where your float is on your main line for the different water you are fishing, then all you have to do is use a long leader with an adjustable float and you will be able to reproduce the same results you did with the spinning outfit but with the satisfaction of using the fly rod.

or you can just go for broke and just experiment with your fly rod...either way long leaders