

Subject: : Warm Water & Salt Water Fly-Fishing

Topic: : Musky Fishing in State College

Re: Musky Fishing in State College

Author: : Fishidiot

Date: : 2013/10/1 17:22:36

URL:

Quote:

PACOFRANSICO wrote:

The waters levels have bin really bad hoping for a dump of rain. Something to give em alittle bump dirty outta the banks type.

But they'll heading to there wintering holes soon, times running out.

Agreed.

The fall is a great time - perhaps the best time - to chase river muskies. In the meantime, while we're waiting for rain.....this is a great time to scout rivers. The low clear water will enable you to see all the holes, bottom structure, and even muskies themselves (getting them to bite in these clear water conditions is another story). Anyway, take some time to scout some river sections, then later this fall when water levels are higher and the sun lower, you'll know where the deeper spots are. In particular, look for shoreline eddies. Right now, these spots are clear and maybe a foot deep and don't look like much. However, come November and bigger flows, these eddies will be much deeper and will be stack up spots for both muskies and bass.