

Subject: : Warm Water & Salt Water Fly-Fishing

Topic: : Musky Fishing in State College

Re: Musky Fishing in State College

Author: : TLoomis

Date: : 2013/10/1 19:59:41

URL:

Hahah right there with you man. My problem is that I'm an engineering student and I just haven't had the time to spend looking for these things. I guess that's not really a problem considering it's a good life choice but damn...it's really cutting into my fishing time heh. All joking aside, I think my dad may bring the boat up for the Michigan game with plans to explore bald eagle in the Mill Hall area. Should be interesting.

My best days have also been during the bad weather and stained water. I'll never forget, the first time I went for musky on the fly (this past spring), it was overcast, misting ALL day, and we had 12 follows and a swipe. The next ill-weathered weekend that's not a home game, I am going to drive to the lake and rent a pontoon boat and just hit it hard with all my buddies to increase the chances of something happening. I went there last year with spinning tackle to catch bass, and ended up landing a small musky. Then about 20 minutes later I snapped off a bigger one after a long fight. So atleast I'll have some confidence if we go there. I've heard of people pulling out 50+ers here too so there's that.