All the flies above are pretty nice. most of the fall fishing i do is either for brookies or on small to medium sized limestoners, so i've been tying sculpins in different colors, general attractor patterns for brookies, and some big articulated streamers for the bigger browns. it seems like the limestone browns are really starting to key on streamers. My brother and i were fishin a smallish limestoner last weekend and we were catching some fish on a dry-dropper, but mostly smaller ones in the 8-13" range. I threw on a black shenk's sculpin and caught a 15-16" brown in the first hole i fished. We only fished for another 20 minutes or so after that, and i moved fish in every spot after that. Im not much of a streamer fisherman, but man are they fun.
