Catch and release is to be for the survival of the fish and taking pictures as one said just to be able to put on social media is a problem. I mean come on just how many pictures of average fish can one have of themselves.

It may be true that some do it to prove they actually caught fish that day but at the end of the day I personally don't care if people believe me or not, I try not to let the fish out of the water at all, released in the net, in the water is how I always try to do it. Maybe it is because I have been at this a while but I could care less about pictures any more. Fly fishing goes way beyond the catch and the proof of it, it has been described as a passion, a addiction and so on but it is really a way of life and the actual catch is just a bonus of that lifestyle.
