That map is based on the PFBC's "Streams with Natural Reproduction List". IMO, it's the best list/map out there for use. Most of my favorites are not class A.

That doesn't make it foolproof. As was said, many haven't been surveyed in decades. Also, many have reproduction, but aren't very good. And many are good only in small areas, and that doesn't guarantee the area you visit has them.

It's also only streams which HAVE been surveyed. As they survey more, they're finding trout in streams that aren't on there. They eventually get around to adding them to the list but I'm not sure that map has been updated in a few years.

So, it's the best resource available. And that's a pretty big achievement. But given how many streams there are, limited resources at the PFBC, and widely varied angler interest, there's just no such thing as perfect. It's gonna be hit and miss. The searching is half the fun anyway, this map merely ups your success rate a bit.
