The Upper DHALO of Laurel is holding pockets of fish. Was up there a couple weeks ago and had a lot of success using some terrestrials. Started back behind boy scout camp.

Indian Creek DHALO section off 381 is a mess, beavers/muskrats (not really sure what they are) have destroyed parts of that section damming up pockets causing the stream to actually re-route itself in one spot. Learned how to fly-fishing on that section some 20 yrs ago. Its getting more and more difficult to fish which drives down number of people which would make you think more fish. One thing about That stream is that with the restricted flow from downed trees and animals there is a tremendous amount of sediment buildup which I feel is having impact on the insect life on the stream. I did land a nearly 20inch brownie and a nice brookie way upstream last time there.
