

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : Steelhead 2013-2014 Thread

Re: Steelhead 2013-2014 Thread

Author: : pcray1231

Date: : 2013/10/7 10:27:39

URL:

Per the gauges, streams are heading up fast.

Still not as high as the event on Sept. 21-22. But still rising, tough to tell how high it will go. One negative is that it was a relatively warm rain for October, but air temps are falling behind the front as the streams spike out.

Erie international reports 0.64" of rain yesterday, and another 0.82" today.

Might be a small band set up along the lake shore and push in tonight. Won't amount to a whole lot, but may or may not amount to more than a drizzle. After that it gets dry again, for a while. Karen's remnants ain't gonna make it that far inland.

For the eastern side of the state, Karen's remnants may reform into a pretty good Noreaster around next weekend time frame. Too warm for snow, obviously, but it could kind of stall over us and dump a bunch of cold rain.