Mike was nice enough to write the most important reason behind this suggestion in his post, however it appears no one picked up on it.

"In urban parks."

Urban parks have high use, which generates not only direct revenue (license sales) but also indirect attention ("how come they don't stock this stream anymore, I'll complain to my representative," which in turn means that attention is given to the PFBC, "my constituents are bitching, give them fish or don't expect me to approve a fee hike," etc).

Frankly, allowing only coops and official PFBC fish into a stream does wonders when otherwise you can have people throwng trout rodeos on the stream and throwing in a ridiculously out of proportion of biomass and really throwing it off.

Sometimes, people, you gotta make exceptions for the greater good.
