That sounds like a load of crap, why would one have any more significance than the other? Either are comments from tax paying citizens who are also most likely license buyers so one form of communication is just as 'powerful' as the other if it comes from a concerned or interested citizen. Sounds to me like Mr Arway needs to learn to get with the times or GTFO

Because typing four lines of text and clicking send requires a whole lot less effort than sending a written letter through the mail.

One shows you're committed to something enough to put effort forth, the other one shows that you're willing to piss away 45 seconds of your day between emails from your boss.

Deal with it.
