I'm fine with marketing putting a little spin on things. So long as spin doesn't equal WRONG.

For instance:

Quote:

Type 304 stainless would've sufficed fine unless the user cleans reels with Clorox! It's not a lie. It may be a slight exaggeration.

They used 17-4. Which is LESS corrosion resistant than Type 304. So, if the user cleans with Clorox, you gave him a worse option. Now, how is that an exaggeration and not a lie?

Just because you didn't KNOW you were lying doesn't mean you weren't.
