Something you may want to consider is pre-rigging your dry droppers. Tie some up before you hit the water at your house, when you can sit down and tie good clean knots, and you can store them in one of those cheap clear adjustable compartment plano boxes. Once on the stream just clinch knot the dry and you are good to go.

Tie some with short, some with medium, and some with long droppers.

It will save time and frustration on the water, and its an excellent tactic to have at your disposal, but when standing in the middle of a river, its a pain to rig up.
