

Subject: : Conservation

Topic: : slab cabin run HQCW fight

Re: slab cabin run HQCW fight

Author: : sarce

Date: : 2013/10/14 13:28:10

URL:

Can anyone explain what exactly UAJA is being asked to do that is different from their current projects? After reading the article it is not clear to me.

Slab Cabin has been my favorite stream during my last 3 years at PSU. Everywhere I've fished it I have found a thriving brown trout population and wild rainbows that are becoming more and more common. Maybe not Class A for brown trout EVERYWHERE, but well above in some sections and below in others. But why does that matter? The HQ-CWF always applies to a whole stream, right?

And what's with all the talk about it drying up some years? A few times I've seen it low and barely flowing in certain areas, but not dry. And there were always trout in that low water. Maybe some upper sections dry up every few years, but the size of some of the fish there suggests otherwise.