What about if there are no trails ?

I saw this the other day - on the EB of the brandywine there was one section of maybe 1/2 a mile and at regular intervals you could see evidence of one or two anglers pushing through the brush.

It made me think that one or even two well spaced trails would have resulted in less damage no ?

Kind of like creating a crossing on the sand dunes, it's better for 12" to be totally trampled rather than a criss-cross patchwork of trails.

I thought I'd maybe write to the State Parks division.

I'd say if there are no trails then there isn't enough traffic to worry about.
