Yeah, it's a little misleading.

"Most Americans won't see earnings as the result of developing LNG exports."

No kidding. Most won't see DIRECT earnings. The same is true of EVERY industry. But SOME will see direct earnings, and most will/are seeing indirect improvements in the economies.

I mean, I know lots of people who got some lease money. Nobody got rich over it, but it helps. Heck, the STATE got lots of lease money. And that results in either more state services, and/or lower taxes, which theoretically benefits us all.

There are, of course, negatives too. And ultimately, like everything, it's about whether the benefits are worth the cost. But outright claiming zero benefits (or zero costs) immediately categorizes that claim into the "biased rhetoric" category, which should be immediately dismissed.
