I adopted Czech style nymphing this year and I absolutely love it. All the Euro styles are fairly complex rigs and I find I prefer the the short leader, high stick technique to get the flies properly through the strike zone. I really have enjoyed it and had great success with it. Additionally, I feel it provides an easier way to search dirty or blown out water in a methodical pattern and absolutely catch fish you otherwise would have passed/missed.

It was particularly succesful in Yellowstone this year fishing blown out Slough Creek and the Lamar. No one was on the water except for my buddy and myself and we caught the big boys in muddy water using the Czech technique exclusively. Im convinced it allowed us to have a great day alone on usually crowded water and catch fish much bigger than if we were pitching dries...
