

Subject: : Conservation

Topic: : Fisherman's trails

Re: Fisherman's trails

Author: : Maurice

Date: : 2013/10/17 17:48:21

URL:

Yinz guys are crazy. Who cares if there is a mowed path near the stream? It ain't harming anything. I wish someone would trim that bramble patch down at Muddy. Nothing worse than blazing through and getting a rose thorn in your nose and another in your eyelid pulling in opposite direction.

Clipping thorn bushes to get through without tearing your waders or drawing blood is of no consequence to conservation. Even mowing a strip to maincure a path and make it a nice access is even OK in my book...as long as there are reasonable shrubs and trees between the water and the path. An entry point is also not a big deal to the stream. The amount of erosion amounts to spit in a bucket.

Don't you have bigger fish to fry?

I do not condone mowing up to the bank or removing trees along the bank though...Thats when I get my panites in a wad. Dang it!