i then just dunk em under the tap to clean, and leave them on a paper towel to dry.

if the tying thread, hook eye and point are intact, then once they are dry they go back in the boxes.

i started doing it with saltwater flies first cos you really don't want salt in your wallet/boxes but now i do it for bass, trout and salmon too.
