i'd suggest a compromise then - small scale experiments in typical areas, and waiting until we have the science that says cutts and gray ladies can exist and thrive there.

otherwise the whole thing is a giant waste of time.

i'd obviously prefer to catch native fish, but not at the expense of a failed attempt resulting in barren water.

and btw sea lampreys are mauling laker populations in lake champlain - maybe they should just introduce sea lampreys in Yellowstone to keep the lakers down...
